Dear DEP,

I have avoided comment up until now but now I it is time to voice my concerns.

Early on in the debate regarding the water discharge from the plant the point was made comparing the amount of water in Penobscot Bay to the amount of water released into the Bay by Nordic. At first this argument swayed me toward thinking that the discharge would be no problem. It would be like putting a drop of water warm water in many gallons of cold water and mixing it up. No problem, right?

But this is not a good argument..... The discharge will not become thoroughly mixed with the large volume of water in the Bay. In fact there is little know about how the discharge will be mixed with the Bay water.....

Sincerely,

David Smith
