Dear Air Quality Bureau Cayting,

Maine should not take a significant risk in adopting California's laws to require heavy-duty electric vehicles. Heavy-duty electric vehicles are too new to force Maine businesses into acquiring less cost-efficient vehicles. Until they are proven to work in a private entity, Maine should keep away from regulating electric vehicles. Once electric heavy-duty vehicles are cost-effective, businesses will automatically shift to using them without any government rules.

Sincerely,

Anthony Salafia
